Welcome to Part Two of artnet News' list of powerful women in the art world. There are so many ways to exercise influence and power in the art world, but one thing is abundantly clear: Women play a leading role. With this list, artnet News continues its yearlong celebration of women in the art world with "The 100 Most Powerful Women in Art." Divided into three parts, our list is arranged alphabetically to avoid the perception of a ranking: We are celebrating the achievements of women in the art world, period.

The list was developed in consultation with art world denizens throughout Europe, Asia, and the United States. They helped us compile a working list of the most powerful women in the art business. From the initial list of more than 300 names, the editors at artnet News chose 100.

Read Part Two, below, and come back to the site on October 22 to find out who else is playing at the top of her game. If you missed Part One, "The 100 Most Powerful Women in Art: Part One," we invite you to take a look and see who's who.
