Mitra Tabrizian’s exhibition of photographs at Leila Heller gallery is a series of stark formal compositions of people displaced within their environments, disengaged or trapped in contemplation.

Born in Tehran, Iran, Tabrizian lives in London and is familiar with the diaspora of Iranians living in exile, some of whom cannot return to their homelands – but identify with and share in a common virtual community.

Tabrizian likes to photograph her subjects in their isolation, lost in transitional spaces, at stations, within derelict and abandoned settings that emphasize their migrant status as economic and social outsiders. Often they seem caught in a tableau or arrested motion, in a protracted frozen moment.

A photograph taken at JP Morgan bank’s lobby during the height of the financial crises, depicts the bank’s associates with a sense of disconnection staring into the middle distance, each an island to themselves. Tabrizian has used actors in staged settings for her past works, but in this case she has used the actual bank’s employees to reflect the corporate culture which she reconstructs in her own view as a ‘cold and flat’ mise-en-scène.
